

FAIL ELECTIONS UNDER NEW REGIME

New Registrars to Do Their Work Speedily.

ALL OFFICERS TO TAKE OATH

Judges to Swear to Support New Constitution or Vacate—Mr. Green Makes a Fiery Speech on the Subject—Interesting Session.

The Constitutional Convention made some very important amendments to the schedule yesterday and completed it, with the exception of fixing the matter in relation to the terms of Circuit and County Court clerks. One of the most striking amendments was that requiring the congressional elections this fall be held under the new Constitution. Another was to require that all executive and judicial officers in the State take the oath of allegiance to the new Constitution, not later than July 20th, or vacate their office. Gov. Montague was called upon to issue a proclamation to the people of Virginia, informing them that the new Constitution would be effective on July 10th, and calling upon them to give their support to it.

The Printing Committee was authorized to provide for the printing of the debates of the new Constitution for preservation, and the Enrollment Committee was authorized to prepare the instrument, with instructions that the work be done within one week.

Considerable discussion occurred over the pending proposition, and Mr. Robertson took occasion to say that his objection to the new Constitution was not to the substance, but to the form, and that he would support it if it were amended to his satisfaction.

Mr. W. A. Anderson moved for a substitute for the resolution, to the effect that the new Constitution should be adopted in every detail.

Mr. Robertson again assured the convention that his opposition to delay arose only out of a desire that the instrument should be adopted in every detail.

Mr. Green replied that he had no objection to the resolution, but that he was not in favor of the amendment, and that he would support the resolution as it stood.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

Mr. Green, of Danville, made the speech of the day, in which he characterized the opposition to the resolution as the last expiring hope of defeating the Constitution. In answer to a question as to what he would do should the Governor and members of the Legislature refuse to adopt the new Constitution, he said: "I would hang them, if I could," he said, amid loud applause.

MEMBERS GIVING IN THEIR LISTS

Registration Boards for Many Counties.

TO BE ELECTED TO-MORROW

As a Rule a High Class of Men Are Being Selected, and Their Reason to Believe That the New Laws Will Be Fairly Carried Out.

Below will be found a partial list of registration officers suggested by members of the convention for their respective counties. The entire list will be reported to the convention on tomorrow. Richmond city has already been printed and that for Henrico county will be found elsewhere in The Times of to-day. The others given out so far are as follows:

PETERSBURG.
First Ward—J. W. Wells, J. M. Saunders, F. S. Myers.

Second Ward—J. J. Birchett, J. W. Friend, N. E. Wicker.

Third Ward—A. R. Moody, Samuel Gentry, W. D. Spratley.

Fourth Ward—J. P. Colwell, R. G. Bass, R. L. Claytor.

Fifth Ward—James A. Collier, R. W. Ford, Thomas B. Ivey.

Sixth Ward—W. E. Meredith, B. D. Akers, D. C. Dought.

NORFOLK CITY.
First—A. M. Higgins, H. N. Poulson, J. A. Bracher.

Second—Barton Myers, A. J. Dalton, Willoughby T. Cooke.

Third—Walter H. Taylor, J. E. Heath, J. R. Robert, S. Doughton.

Fourth—James T. Holland, James G. Brownlee, Charles C. Grant.

Fifth—N. C. Pamplin, A. M. Cousins, James L. Winston.

Sixth—Robert T. Tomlin, Victor Parks, W. Leigh Williams.

Seventh—P. C. Stanworth, J. T. Deal, Ira T. Holt.

BUENA VISTA CITY.
First Ward—G. W. Leckie, W. P. Lee, W. R. Patton.

Second Ward—Hugh A. White, S. P. Gibson, T. L. Brown.

WINCHESTER CITY.
First Ward—J. M. Haymaker, Adam Forney, J. W. Taylor.

Second—Julian F. Ward, J. Brad Beverley, Harry Wood.

Third—W. W. Wall, Charles Fitzpatrick, Ross Barr.

Fourth—W. P. McGuire, T. M. Baer, Joseph Kiger.

IRVINGTON CITY.
Pewellton—B. W. Mitchell, S. P. Carpenter, A. S. Rawlings.

Meherin—P. H. Rawlings, G. B. Harris, N. S. Jones.

Red Oak—John Haskins, U. S. Sanford, S. J. Wallace.

Sturgeon—D. C. Thomas, W. W. Doyle, James A. Browder.

Totaro—W. T. Sledge, W. O. Lashley, S. E. Williams.

ROCKINGHAM.
Ashby—Peter C. Tutwiler, Joseph F. Craun, Joseph C. Meyers.

Linville—Joseph L. Humbert, David Wenger, David M. Hollar.

Plains—J. W. Harrison, Charles E. Fabner, Charles S. Winder.

Stonewall—John W. Blackburn, Joseph A. Hammen and one to be added.

Central—J. W. Sheets, George R. Eastham, George G. Herring.

SHADY GROVE.
White Stone—Joseph B. Cralle, William M. Kirk, Frank G. Newbill.

Mantua—William J. Barker, Herbert P. Hall, Robert O. Norris, Jr.

White Chapel—William H. Jesse, James P. Saunders, William A. Saunders.

RICHMOND COUNTY.
Stonewall—A. A. Tallafiero, G. W. Balderson, T. D. Marks.

Marshall—G. M. Snyder, J. F. Garland, W. Y. Morgan.

Washington—P. Y. Barber, B. B. Griffith, W. A. Bryant.

Farmham—J. L. Motley, R. C. Lumpkin, W. H. Rice.

LUNenburg.
Lock Levee—Robertson Featherston, S. J. Hite, Walter Neblett.

Columbian Grove—R. Lee Thomas, W. H. Hawthorn, S. H. Love.

Brown's Store—Theodore Argain, Garland Bailey, L. J. Hamlin.

Levee—J. T. Waddill, Lula Gee, Austin Powles.

Rehoboth—W. A. Bigler, S. A. Harding, C. T. Robertson.

Pleasant Grove—W. N. Love, C. B. Edwards, J. A. Shackleton.

BOTETOURT.
Amsterdam—C. M. Swartz, G. W. Bowyer, J. F. Gardner.

Pinecastle—C. W. Veltz, C. W. Rudisill, M. S. Caboon.

Buchanan—C. W. Huffman, W. M. Brubaker, U. H. Hyde.

SMYTH.
Marion—Henry B. Haller, J. Sanders Aker, James A. Groseloc.

Rick Valley—Dr. J. D. Buchanan, Joseph Roberts, George P. Phipps.

St. Clair—Dr. T. K. McKee, Captain Robert C. Williams, Albert P. Killingier.

RUSSELL.
Lebanon—J. J. Gilmer, A. F. Hurt, W. H. Fuller.

Rick Garden—H. W. Martin, Sylvester Albert, Charles W. Belcher.

New Garden—Boston Steele, Thomas P. Robinson, M. H. Burnett.

Cleveland—J. S. Tate, Richard D. Smith, Lilburn Finney.

Castwood—John F. Candler, Robert Cooper, W. C. Griggs.

Cooper Creek—E. M. Tresson, Joseph W. Bostwick, Henry Steele.

Moccasin—John Hanson, Cline Tate, Edward Kitchin.

HANOVER.
Beaver Dam—V. D. Wickham, John Campbell, A. C. Redd.

Ashland—M. P. Howard, W. C. Taylor, B. L. Quarles.

Henry—F. H. Holliday, Thomas R. Puller, F. S. Beale.

PAGE.
Shenandoah—Thomas M. Keyser, Geo. A. Keyser, Isaac Shuler.

Marksville—Thomas J. Graves, John H. Cave, J. W. Long.

Luray—R. C. Bragonier, N. B. Smith, John A. Ellis.

Springfield—W. H. Griffith, L. C. Kibler, George W. Keyser.

CAROLINE.
Reedy Church—Clarence Bowers, Arch Samuel, T. R. Campbell.

Bowling Green—S. W. Broadus, Eugene Pitts, J. H. Martin.

Port Royal—J. B. Washington, C. B. Conway, R. C. Thornton.

DINWIDDIE.
Rowanty—John V. Harris, James W. Bouscaw, William F. Baugh.

Kennedie—J. C. Smith, Andrew Meade, H. C. Lovett.

Darville—E. S. Hobbs, E. W. Ludgins, J. A. Frayer.

Saphony—Dr. E. C. Powell, C. E. Abernethy, J. P. Atkinson.

LYNCHBURG.
First—Leon Goodman, G. P. Watkins, H. A. Southall.

Second—S. Garland Hammer, J. A. Scott, Fred Harper.

Third—C. A. Cobourn, A. B. Percy, H. D. Johnson.

PRINCE EDWARD.
Hampton—Sidney—R. E. Stokes, Samuel Lang, George W. Redd.

Farmville—A. R. Venable, Jr., W. H.

Richardson, Peter Winston.
Lockett—B. H. Ligon, W. L. Clark, E. T. Bonardant.
Leigh—J. J. Gilliam, W. S. Dance, D. Jones.

Buff—J. P. Glenn, Charles A. Morton, W. B. Binford.